Richmond Division

Frederick G. Jenson (sic), Plaintiff,

v.

United States of America, Defendant.

Civil Action No. 85-0648-R

ORDER

This matter comes before the Court on defendant's motion to dismiss. Plaintiff Jenson (sic) instituted suit to obtain recovery of taxes paid in 1979 and 1980, which he contends were "erroneously, illegally and unconstitutionally assessed and collected." Because Jenson had claimed an income tax credit for taxes used to fund abortions, the Internal Revenue Service had penalized him $500 for filing a "frivolous" income tax return within the meaning of I.R.C. § 6702.

Jenson's complaint apparently proceeds on two theories: that his religious beliefs prevent the payment of taxes which are used to fund abortions, and that "Congress has no constitutional authority to lay and collect taxes which are used to fund abortions."

As to Jenson's first argument, "(t)axpayers generally are not permitted to avoid payment of a tax when their objections concern the manner in which government revenues are expended." Olsen v. C.I.R., 709 F.2d 278, 282 (4th Cir. 1983); see also, Autenreich (sic) v. Cullen, 418 F.2d 586 (9th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 397 U.S. 1036. Cf. United States v. Lee, 455 U.S. 252, 260 (1981) ("Because the broad public interest in maintaining a sound tax system is of such a high order, religious belief in conflict with the payment of taxes affords no basis for resisteing the tax.") As the Ninth Circuit has stated,

> "nothing in the Constitution prohibits the Congress from levying a > tax upon all persons, regardless of religon (sic), for support of the general government. The fact that some persons may object, on religious grounds, to some of the things that the government does is not a basis upon which they can claim a constitutional right not to pay a part of the tax... The Income Tax Act... taxes plaintiffs like all others, because they are citizens or residents who have taxable income. On matters religious, it is neutral."

Autenreich, 418 F.2d at 588; see also Lull v. Commissioner, 602 F.2d 116 (4th Cir. 1979).

Jenson argues, however, that Congress has no authority to require payment of taxes which are used, in part, to fund abortions. This Court must hold that Jenson has no standing to assert this claim. Plaintiff proceeds on the basis of the Tenth Amendment, that the United States has no power not delegated to it by the Constitution. From there, he continues by stating that courts have decided cases concerning the use of taxes to support military operations and citing Graves v. Commissioner, 579 F.2d 392 (6th Cir. 1978). Jenson then concludes by analogizing those cases to the use of taxes in contravention of the Fifth Amendment (deprivation of life without due process) and the Tenth Amendment. He thus urges that the Court can hear his claim. The Court here assumes that Congress is indeed using Jenson's taxes to fund abortions, although the record contains no showing of specific Congressional grants of funds for this purpose. Nonetheless, the Court holds that the taxpayer has no standing to raise this challenge.

The requirements for taxpayer standing to challenge the constitutionality of Congressional taxing and spending measures were laid down by the Supreme Court in Flast v. Cohen, 392 U.S. 83 (1968). The Court there put forth two aspects of taxpayer standing. Id. at 102-03. The first concerns the logical link between a taxpayer's status and the type of legislative enactment attacked. Jenson meets this, since he alleges, under the taxing and spending clause, the unconstitutionality of Congressional power to tax and spend. Jenson, because he relies on the Tenth Amendment to challenge this particular spending power of Congress, does not meet the second element of Flast. This requires the taxpayer to show that the "challenged enactment exceeds specific constitutional taxing and spending power." Id. at 103.

In Flast, the Court distinguished a previous case, Frothingham v. Mellon, 262 U.S. 447 (1923), on the basis of the constitutional limitation asserted as a bar to the challenged enactment. There, the plaintiff maintained that the Tenth Amendment prevented Congress from exercising its power to tax and spend. But, one arguing that the Tenth Amendment prevents a particular enactment is a third party "attempting to assert that States' interest in their legislative prerogative and not a federal taxpayer's interest in being free of taxing and spending in contravention of specific constitutional limitations." 292 U.S. at 105. Neither does "the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment...protect taxpayers against increases in tax liability." Id. Jenson has no standing to assert that Congress use tax monies to fund abortions, as he has not established the appropriate nexus between the asserted Constitutional limitations, the Fifth and Tenth Amendments, and the challenged exercise of Congressional power.

Because of Jenson's claim of tax credit, the Internal Revenue Service assessed him a $500 penalty, under § 6702 for filing a frivolous tax return. The Court holds that this I.R.S. action was an appropriate one, as Jenson clearly falls within the parameters of § 6702. First, since he filed his returns after September 3, 1982, § 6702 applies to them. Second, the § 6702 penalty can be imposed upon any taxpayer filing a purported return failing to contain information from which the correctness of the reported tax liability can be determined or that clearly indicates that the tax liability shown is substantially incorect. Jenson's return satisfies either test. Finally, the taxpayer's state of mind when filing is not relevant to the § 6702 penalty, and his good faith does not preclude the assessing of one. Knottnerus v. U.S., 582 F. Supp. 1572 (N.D. Ill. 1984); Vaughn v. U.S., 589 U.S. 1528 (W.D. La. 1984). Section 6702 does not apply the "empty head, white heart" standard.

Moreover, the Court determines that this suit for a refund never had any basis for being filed in the first place. Jenson's suit has wasted the time of the Court and of government attorneys. The Court therefore holds that an award of attorneys (sic) fees is appropriate here, since the refund action was clearly frivolous, vexatious, and obstructionist in purpose. Reed v. U.S., 581 S. Supp. 718 (D. Colo. 1984). The government attorneys are consequently ORDERED to submit, within ten days of the date of this order, documentation of their time and costs. Plaintiff has a further ten days within which to make known his objections to the award of fees.

Let the Clerk send a copy of this order to all counsel of record.

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT

No. 86-1504

Frederick G. Jensen, Appellant,

versus

United States of America, Appellee.

Appeal from the United States District Court of the Eastern District of Virginia, at Richmond. Richard L. Williams, District Judge. (CA 85-0648-R)

Argued: 7 May 1986 Decided: 25 June 1986

Before MURNACHAN and WILKINSON, Circuit Judges, and BUTZNER, Senior Circuit Judge.

William A. Nunn, III for Appellant; James Love, Tax Division, Department of Justice (Roger M. Olsen, Acting Assistant Attorney General; Michael L. Paup; Gary R. Allen; G. Wingate Grant, Assistant United States Attorney; Gregory S. Hrebniak, Trial attorney on brief) for Appellee.

PER CURIAM:

Frederick G. Jensen appears to be one of that breed who confuses the courts with a soapbox at Hyde Park Corner. He has sought to claim an abortion tax credit or deduction to extinguish his tax liabilities properly due in 1979 and 1980. Claims for refunds based on non-existent abortion tax credit have been denied, penalties imposed for improper procedure in that connection and interest has been assessed.

The district court properly decided those issues when they were raised in Jensen's refund suit. The court sua sponte under F. R. Civ. P. 11, allowed reasonable attorney's fees of $466.65 for no less than 9 hours at a rate of $51.85 per hour for bringing a frivolous, vexations (sic) and obstructionist suit together with the $20.00 docket fee prescribed by 28 U.S.C. § 1923. It was correct in doing so, and Jensen and his counsel, William A. Nunn, III, against both of whom the fees and cost were assessed should have heeded the message.

The taking of the appeal approached contempt. Jensen's Refund Claims filed well before the suit was instituted candidly acknowledged: "My attorneys and I know there is no such thing as an abortion refund..." In that posture of things affirmance of the order of the district court is automatic.

In addition we readily award, against Jensen and his attorney, Nunn, jointly and severally attorney's fees and costs incurred by the Government on appeal. See 28 U.S.C. § 1912 and FRAP 38. The appeal was even more frivolous than the prosecution of the action in the district court. The amount of $1500 suggested by the United States in lieu of particularized amounts for damages and single or double costs is approved. In the customary case there might well be occasion to remand for ascertainment of the appropriate amounts. However, the Government's suggestion is entirely reasonable and further drain on the time of the courts already unduly distracted by the commencement and continuation of Jensen's case is simply not warrented.

AFFIRMED AND AN AWARD AUTHORIZED IN LIEU OF DAMAGES AND DOUBLE COSTS

N.B. The above opinion and order of the Court of Appeals is stamped "UNPUBLISHED".

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT

No. 86-1504

Frederick G. Jensen, Appellant

versus

United States of America, Appellee

MOTION FOR A REHEARING

In Re: Court's Decision

June 25, 1986

For Appellee:

James Love, Tax Division

Department of Justice

For appellant:

William A. Nunn, III

Comes now Frederick G. Jensen, plaintiff-appellant in the above named case, to move pro se for a rehearing as follows:

1. Court may well hear certain new facts before characterizing appellant's "soapbox" behavior in support of its holding of frivolity:

2. Appellant's statement about tax refund regulations is not a fact in the Court's alleged context:

3. The fact of an offer made in District Court, Feb 29, 1984 to place taxes due in escrow, as the law provides, is evidence to be considered in deciding the question of frivolity;

4. Appellant's concession an abortion suit is frivolous if abortion on demand is constitutional law, may well be considered in this case as the Court decides its frivolity;

5. Either appellant's refusal to pay taxes to support abortion's law is not criminal, or the government is obliged to proceed criminally in this case, since he is required to claim a refund in order to bring this suit under tax law and/or regulations.

1) The Court finds Jensen, apellant, to be "one of that breed" in declaring his appeal "approached contempt". In doing so the Court upheld the finding of the District Court that the original suit was legal frivolity. Thus, in 250 words or less this Court has disposed of the wound this taxpayer and all those citizens entitled to peace and order under law daily endure because of the widespread practice of abortion on demand.

Now a frivolous case, as one made out by an entertaining and amusing Hyde Park orator, might well fall within the legal definition of "frivolous", so as to warrant this single sentence judgment of the Court, but the fact is appellant has always, out of respect for our courts and the legal "code" theyuphold, spoken to the courts through his attorney. In the light of the facts below, it would be hard to understand how any reasonable person will persist in finding Jensen's behavior amusing to the point of legal frivolity.

Appellant was unable to sue, as being injured by the expenditure of United States general finds (funds, sic) to do abortions, because the I.R.S.

(Internal Revenue Service) failed to carry out its obligation to collect unpaid taxes for five years straight. Only after appellant, a retired seaman, settled in Virginia and complained to his new Congressman, did the I.R.S. move to collect. Appellant immediately contacted a local law firm to represent him.

To date appellant's legal costs have exceeded $20,000. The I.R.S. has by seizure collected a claimed $10,000 in taxes, overcollected an estimated $9,000 to $10,000 in withholding and other payments not credited, and contrary to the Fifth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution sold real property worth $10,000 to $12,000 for $2,100 allowing a net credit of $1,900 on taxes claimed due. Appellant bought this acre-plus of waterfront access property for $,500 ($7,500, sic), put up a shack for overnighting and tools, cleared a number of large oak trees, dug out the roots, put in culvert and road, ran 120 feet of waterline 18" deep, mixed cement and laid a slab together with steel and concrete pilings, dug in a sceptic tank, trenched 150 feet of 3 foot by 3 foot soil for a drainfield, and did this with hand tools by his own labor.

While neither the money or the labor has any bearing on the sole issue, abortion, in this case, the facts may well put the Court on notice, it is not dealing with a frivolous breed of litigant, but a flesh and blood human, who, while traumatically concerned about the Supreme Court's abortion on demand decision in Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113 (1973), is normally capable of paying and working his own way. Appellant may well be "wasting" more of his own money and time than the Court is willing to spend.

2) These facts in themselves do not entirely dispose of the Court's

"frivolous" holding, since a suit brought without regard for existing law also falls within one of the definitions of a frivolous, empty, and vexatious suit. The Court states, "Claims for refunds based on non-existent abortion tax credit have been denied...", (Citing no case.) and quoted Jensen's "candidly acknowledged: 'My attorneys and I know there is no such thing as an abortion refund...'." Here, the Court has overlooked the facts in the record, or does not have access to them.

Attorney for defendant-appellee discusses the legal procedure "prerequisite to the maintainance of a refund suit", as found in I.R.C. Section 7422, (1954) Title 26 U.S.C. where is stated: (p. 16, brief before the Court of Appeals:)

> (a) No suit prior to claiming refund.--No suit or proceeding shall be maintained in any court for the recovery of any internal > revenue tax alleged to have been erroneously or illegally assessed or collected, or of any penalty claimed to have been collected without authority, or of any sum alleged to have been excessive or in any manner wrongfully collected, until a claim for refund or credit has been duly filed with the Secretary, according to the provisions of law in that regard, and the regulations of the Secretary established in pursuance thereof.

Thus, the purpose of the Abortion Refund was to comply with the law for maintaining a suit. It is surely clear no such refund in any amount spent to do an abortion will well restore the life of the unborn terminated thereby.

Subpart (b) liberally allows:

> (b) Protest or duress--Such suit or proceeding may be maintained whether or not such tax penalty or sum has been paid under duress.

Thus, there was no obligation on the part of the I.R.S. to press collection, as it did.

Nevertheless, the I.R.S. must assess or collect before a suit can be brought, though the payment may or may not have actually been paid or protested. Jensen protested each year on the face of the tax form submitted and disregarded for years by the I.R.S. See note 9) on page 16 of defendant-appellee's brief, above. Further, form 843 was also duly filed with the tax court and it is on its face that Jensen's statement, above, appears.

The statement is evidence that the complaint in this case is not for a refund of taxes assessed/collected but an attempt to preserve the cause of action, that appellant is injured when intermingled tax funds are used by government to pay for abortions, directly and indirectly. It is surely clear no legal remedy will restore the life of the innocent unborn. The law protects such a life. The law may not stand idly and silently by, and even aid or accomplish its destruction.

3) There are more facts relating to appellant's intention in bringing this suit. His claim contesting the expenditure of his taxes, as above, might well have been brought under Treasury Regulations, Section 1.461 (a). The term "contest" is defined in Federal Tax Regulations (1984), Section 1.461-1-(b)-(2) by description,

> "A contest arises if there is a bonafide dispute as to the proper evalutation of the law or the facts necessary to determine the existence or correctness of the amount of the asserted liability. ...An afirmative act...such as including a written protest with payment of the asserted liability is sufficient to commence a contest..."

Subsection (c) continues:

> "A taxpayer may provide for the satisfaction of an asserted liability by transferring money...beyond his control...(ii) to an escrowee or trustee pursuant to a written agreement, (among the escrowee or trustee, the taxpayer, and the person who is asserting the liability)..."

Such a course of proceeding could have made more clear to the Court the equities, i.e., injury and remedy, involved in this case: but more.

The suit in Federal Court began with a plea for injunctive relief in the Richmond District Court of Warriner, J., deceased, the day before Jensen's real property was sold at public auction on the steps of the Lancaster County Courthouse. The offer appellant made orally by his attorney to place the disputed amount in escrow fell by the wayside. The Court most certainly has grounds to find, as to behavior, appellant stands before the Court rather more unfarly abused than frivolous, see 1) above, and finally:

4) Councel for defendant-appellee based his case on a showing that tax protest cases are now, per se, frivolous. He did an excellent job quoting and citing over 20 cases by tax protestors which were denied for an array of reasons. In spite of the particular rational in each case, the great number, all denied, implies, perhaps, that it is the nature of the suit, i.e., the tax protest, that is frivolous, and not the particular reason for which it is brought.

Allowing that this was Councel's póint, arguendo, this abortion case can be distinguished readily, both generally and particularly. Cases concerning defense, environmental, and religious tax collections or expenditures, all concern activity allowed by the Constitution, i.e., national defense, commerce and welfare, and religious freedom, respectively. This case concerns the practice of abortion which is nowhere mentioned in the written document, while, conversely, the life of the product of abortion is at least generally protected by the Fifth Amendment. This is true notwithstanding there is no attempt made in Roe v. Wade, above, to define the life of the unborn, except to exclude it from protection under the Fourteenth Amendment, which is limited to human life after birth in its application.

Specifically, none of the above classes of cases involve expenditures directed to take the life of particular persons unborn, invariably and incontestably innocent.

However, settling the question of frivolity argued by councel for defendant-appelle in favor of plaintiff-appellant does not provide relief, i.e., settle this case. Councel's argument is simply not in point on the abortion question. The holding of the Court is the same.

The Court can reasonably, legally and most expeditiously find appellant's plea frivolous on the ground that abortion on demand is the constitutional law of the land--and always has been. Obviously, appellant does not consider

BEST AVAILABLE COPY

Roe v. Wade, stare decisis, as the Supreme Court held in Akron. His actions viewed in that light only can be surmised to be frivolous.

In the tax protest cases cited by Councel for defendant-appellee, the courts not only found the tax protest illegal, but nearly always coped with the contention of each particular suitor; no war was declared, there was no compliance with the London Treaty, no compliance with international law, etc. If the Court believes abortion is law, as perhaps it must, it has no obligation to reargue it here, nor has appellant urged such argument in full and complete detail. The original decision was made by the Supreme Court, which injures the nation and this taxpayer. This Court does not have the power to alter that decision, appellant believes.

What this Court owes plaintiff-appellant is a clear statement of its reason for holding his plea frivolous. A flat statement that abortion is law and that appellant is bound to know it, is the apparent need of the Court. The Supreme Court could willingly fill in its own details or not. However, plaintiff-appellant believes the Supreme Court has no power to make or unmake our Constitution, and acts mala in se, like abortion can never be made legal.

5) See 3).

Wherefore petitioner prays the Court to proceed to a rehearing on the question of frivolity, or such amendment of its decision as the facts above may require.

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR

THE FOURTH CIRCUIT

No. 86-1504

Frederick G. Jensen, Appellant,

versus

United States of America, Appellee.

MOTION TO AMEND THE

MOTION FOR A REHEARING

In Re: Court's Decision 25 June 1986

For Appellant:

F.G. Jensen, Pro se
P. O. Box 372
Irvington, VA 22480

For Appellee:

James Love
Tax Div.
Dept. of Justice

Comes now Frederick G. Jensen Plaintiff-appellant in the above case to ask the indulgence of the Court to permit him to add additional information concerning liens for 1984 taxes arising upon a Notice of Deficiency dated 26 June 1986 issued to defeat appellant's claim that certain capital losses or abortion claims sustained as a result of tax auctions of his property on 1 March 1984 are deductable capital losses in calculating net taxable income for 1984.

DOCUMENTS:

1. Notice of Deficiency issued 26 June 1986.

2. Tax form and letter stating appellant believed no tax protest was open to him in 1984, since no tax was due.

3. I.R.S. audit purporting to show tax due.

4. Plaintiff-appellant's letter soliciting agreement of District Director Gerard R. Esposito for establishing an escrow account covering the disputed amount, pursuant to Federal Tax Regulations Section 1.461-1-(b)-(2) and (c).

The dispute is over the character of a capital loss on tax sales of property belonging to an "abortion protestor", whether it amounts to a legal loss and can properly be deducted on the face of the tax form, since it is an abortion deduction.

Appellant argues that regardless of the name given the deduction, the effect is to permit him to avoid (legal avoidance) the payment of taxes used in whole or in part to support abortion.

Internal Revenue Code Section 7430 (d) provides a remedy for multiple actions:

> For the purposes of this section, in the case of--
> (1) multiple actions which could have been joined or consolodated, or (2) a case or cases involving a return or returns of the same taxpayer which could have been joined in a single proceeding in the same court,
> Such actions or cases shall be treated as one civil proceeding regardless of whether such joinder or consolodation actually occurs, unless the court in which such action is brought determines in its discretion, that it would be inappropriate to treat such actions or cases as joined for purposes of this section.

Wherefore plaintiff-appellant begs the Court to decide whether the above type of "abortion deduction" is legal for tax purposes.

Dear Sir:

...I have always reported income so as to show that I make a credible statement when I say, "I owe no tax to pay for abortions". I have no objection to reporting and do not wish to make a legal issue of this point.

On the other hand, I have returned to you my S. S. Pension checks, receiving no advice from you as to how you will credit the same to me, since I do not wish to be credited with that portion of government tax revenue which is derived from profits of the abortion industry. Please note, there are no reports of 1984 abortions available in the U.S. Statistical Abstract, but nobody in his right mind will deny that there were more than a million or so for which doctors got paid (legally?) last year. Therefore, I do not include any portion of this amount as 1985 income. Thus, my total income amounts to $14,977.74....

I.R.S. sold a $7,000 parcel of land and improvements not valued,.... for $2,100. My alleged tax bill was credited with the residue after costs of the sale. Now, when this type of thing is done in the private sector, somebody usually ends up in jail. Therefore, I would advise you to credit me with losses of $12,3.0 (N.B. $100 error) and a taxable income under $2,667.74. (-$100) If you do this...I owe no tax for last year at all. So, I cannot refuse to pay it.

Dear Sir:

This is a letter of protest denying the above claim for unpaid taxes for 1984. No taxes are due as per return and covering letter.

Therefore, I request of you an excrow agreement may be reached covering the amount the Service claims, as provided for a "contest" and "escrow agreement" in Federal Tax Regulations, Section 1.461-1-(b)-(2) and (c).

Sincerely yours,

/S/ F. G. Jensen
